Youth-that perennial fact and recurrent challenge-is constantly demanding more sympathetic un-derstanding and thoughtful consideration.. To aid in fostering a clearer perception of the question, THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR is printing 26 articles on "The Youth of Today." written by one well qualified for the task. This is the third article of the series.

By WALTER W. VAN KIRK What about youth and prohibition? critics of youth declare with a sigh that prohibition is corrupting the young people of the United States and that they are living in a state of lawless disregard of the Eighteenth Amendment. This is nonsense.
Is there drinking among young people? To be sure. Not so much, perhaps, as when the present day critics of youth were themselves young, but still there is liquor im-TO MOVE BASE bibling among youth, and nothing is gained in denying this very obvious schools of high school age. These school authorities were asked if there is now more drinking among high school students than before 1918; if there is as much; under what circumstances any existing drinking occurs; the home background of any known drinkers; and the approximate known number of youthful drinkers.

One-third of the public school men answered the questions submitted to them. Nearly two-thirds of the cities and towns of Massachusetts were represented in these replies. Only one high school principal replied categorically that youthful drinking had increased in the last 10 years. Twothirds were unqualifiedly of the opinion that such drinking had not increased.

Many of these men were of the opinion that no increase in drinking was observable, still others that there was considerably less drinking now than before the enactment of the Eighteenth Amendment. Reference was made by certain school officials to "rumors" about drinking which when run down, proved to be nothing more than idle gossip.

One in School of 1700

When asked exactly how many drinking school children were known to these school authorities, the replies indicated that to the best of their knowledge there was not one. One principal said: "There is perhaps one in this high school of 1700." Another replied: "Possible number, eight among 3500 pupils. Actually known, two." One of the principals of a Greater Boston high principals of a Greater Boston high school wrote: "In many years of school teaching I have never seen one pupil under the influence of liquor. I have not seen the least trace of liquor in my connection with this high school."

The Young People's Department of the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, recently sent to 150 organized groups of young people a series of 15 questions. Of the 47 groups replying, 571 young people stated that they had never seen a saloon inside or outside.

Every group amswered as being favorably disposed toward constitutional prohibition and law enforces.

What a different picture this is from that painted by anti-prohibi-tionists and nullificationists at the wet and dry hearing in Washington, D. C. in the spring of 1926. How different, too, from the alleged conditions referred to by Senator James
A. Reed of Missouri who, in his recent wet speech in the Senate, de-'clared that high school students were "guzzling" liquor.

It is this widespread disparity between gossip and facts that led Dr. Gifford Gordon of Australia to say: "As one who comes from the outside and as one who has studied the prochibition question for a number of rational co-operation by college students, and has addressed over 100, one of the colleges of America, I have not the slightest hesitation in giving this kind of talk the direct lie. I call it the most contemptible piece of propaganda that has ever been hurled against any reform.

"It is high time that the good cople of this great land rose in rebellion against this despicable practice of the opposition who, for years past, have been persistently defaming the young manhood and womanod of this Republic, in order to make out a case against prohibition.'

Hitherto the columns of the press have been wide open to unrestricted comment, and this freedom of expression has been one of the features of the French newspapers of which the editors have been proudest. It has been a jealously guarded privilege, and the Government's proposal has raised profound misgivings.

what is apprehended is that the measure, placed in wrong hands, may result in an unwarranted curbing of this ofttimes helpful expression of opinion. It does serve as a check to malodorous schemes if it is known that the moment these are discovered they will be subject to ruthless exposure and denunciation in at least some section of the press.

The Government aims at making the French law as nearly as possible like that of England, but the change is in essence such a departure from general French thesis of press liberty that doubts have been expressed of the Government carrying through the measure.

United States Chamber of Commerce Seeks Aid of Other Trade Bodies

WASHINGTON-The United States Chamber of Commerce has entered the lists against the spoils system in conducting the 1930 census. A form letter has gone out to local cham-bers, trade associations, and business groups over the United States urging them to co-operate with local Congressmen to assure efficient census supervisors in their district. Already responses and recommendations have been returned.

Some of these indicate that local political bosses resent interference in the selection of supervisors. Ordi-narily the 500 or more supervisors are regarded as political plums to be distributed as patronage by the party

The Chamber of Commerce ha found itself almost automatically at the head and the front of sentiment in the community which demands that the national census—like the post office and other federal tasks—should be taken out of politics and on a business basis,

The chamber has just concluded a prolonged fight for a "census of distribution," and expects to see it inribution," and expects to see it incorporated in the law in the new session of Congress. The report also pointed out a need for fuller use of the city's port facilities, for competition in railroad transportation and for co-ordination and modernization of the jewelry industry which is one of the city's largest.

The Norwood survey involved more prominently a study of the effectiveness of local government. Professor Bassett declares cities are just beginning to realize how inex-

Increase in Travel Stated to Bring Surplus Nearer to the Estimate

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITO CALCUTTA — Sir George Rainy, presenting the railway budget in the Assembly at Delhi, declared that in spite of the partial failure of the monsoon in the Punjab and United Provinces and the industrial disputes at Bombay and Jamshedpur, traffic had risen and that the surplu for 1927-28 would be only 2,400, 000 rupees less than the 110,000,000 rupees estimated.

The total receipts on all lines could be put at 1,050,075,000 rupees (£75,000,000) — 20,000,000 rupees (£1,500,000) more than last year and the expenditure 950,000,000 rupees (£71,000,000) which is 36,666,000 rupees (£2,000,000) higher.
On the whole the railway budget has been well received. Certainly the supporters of nationalization are at present entitled to claim that they have been justified. Despite strikes and a weak monsoon, the railways have again earned a handsome profit and done better than was expected. The outstanding hero of the year is the once despised third-class pas-senger, for he has definitely proved that it pays to be nice to him.

The partial failure of the monsoon reduced the number of passengers carried between April and October by no less than 4,000,000, but such was the effect of the reduction made in long distance third-class fares last year that, despite this fall in the number of people traveling, the pas-senger miles traveled rose by 49,-000,000, and, had the year been normal, the initial loss of revenue by the reductions, it is declared, would have been completely

Business Progress Committee to Engage in Energetic Campaign for 10 Years

BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT PHILADELPHIA-A goal for busiess progress for Philadelphia and 11 nearby counties during the next decade has been set by the Philadelphia Business Progress Committee, through its chairman, Ernest T. Trigg. Mr. Trigg estimates that if the leaders in industry in this area will team up their energies, simplify production and effect much needed economies in operation, the output in 1940 should reach $6,500,000,000.

"Briefly stated," Mr. Trigg reports, "the method of arriving at the esti-mates for 1940, is the projection of the normal rate of growth, plus the rate of acceleration experienced by certain other large cities which have undertaken a major program of research, advertising and personal civic salesmanship.

"By giving Philadelphia citizens an instrument through which they may focus their best efforts for sane, far-sighted development of the city's advantages, the Business Progress Committee believes it can render definite important services to the community.

'The committee's program for three years involves advertising, re-search and direct personal civic salesmanship in the interest of stimu-lating existing business activities and attracting desirable new industries."

The 11 countries near Philadelphia are grouped in the survey of the committee for the purpose of showing their influence on Phila-delphia's prosperity. With the acby 1940, these counties, the report states, will produce manufactured products valued at approximately $3,000,000,000 as compared with $1,-504,800,000 in 1927. That indicates, the report goes on to say, for this section, with Philadelphia's prospective growth of $3.500,000,000 in production, a total of $6,500,000,000. Philadelphia's industrial production in 1927 was $1,769,300.000.

Bankers to Lend Chicago Millions for Its Pay Rolls

$40,000,000 at 6 P. C. Goes to Enable City to Pay Its Way -Anticipates Taxes

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU CHICAGO—To tide this city over an emergency caused largely by a delay in the collection of taxes due to a revaluation of real estate, $40,-000,000 is to be loaned by bankers of New York and Chicago on tax anticipation warrants.

The banks stipulated, through their attorney, Henry Cutler, that this money, $20,000,000 for the school board, and an equal amount for the city administration, must be spent only for pay rolls. Contractors and supply men are not to get a cent of it, a condition to which city offi-cials agreed only after the bankers' syndicate stood firm in its demands This loan will carry the city government up to Sept. 1, when it is hoped some taxes will start coming in.

Other conditions imposed by the bankers were that no more tax anticipation warrants would be sold be-tween now and October, and that if more are then sold this same syndi cate is to be given a 10-day option or the offering. Chicago banks are now said to be carrying $100,000,000 in tax anticipation warrants from las year which are due to be paid. Nine Chicago banks and three New York investment houses are in the nev syndicate which takes the warrants

What sets Pierce-Arrow apart

Body and Engine by Pierce-Arrow-and Pierce-Arrow in every part!

DRIEFLY, pride is what puts D Pierce-Arrow first among fine motor cars. Pierce-Arrow owners are naturally people of pride. And pride has been a vital part of Pierce-Arrow manufacture from the beginning.

The new Straight Eight is in quite the loveliest Pierce-Arrow tradition. In a word, it has distinction - a quality born of pride -one that is peculiarly Pierce-Arrow.

When the newly expanded Pierce-Arrow organization undertook the creation of this new car, there was a single cardinal principle laid down. That principle was: "Preserve Pierce-Arrow fineness!"

The aim was a car that would combine slenderness and beauty with size and power-a car that would make bulk and stodginess forever unfashionable in the upper circles of motordom.

And how the resulting automobile-the new Pierce-Arrow Straight Eight arrived at the psychological moment and captured a fastidious field, is already a matter of fine car history.

New York—One new world's record, one new United States record, and a race so close that the timers and a large part of the onlookers thought that the winner was second as well as a very brilliant performance in waterpolo, featured the opening day of the national swimming.

In the waterpolo game, which was played acording to the Amateur Athletic Union rules, which differ widely from the college sport, the team of the Illinois Athletic Club ran away from the team representing Central Y. M. C. A. of Brooklyn, scoring 12 goals to 0 in the 7½-minute period played. At the end of this the Brooklyn team withdrew. W. L. Wallen Jr., at center, was the particular star for the winners, scoring almost at will.

Champions Playing Their Last Game of Season as a Unit Win Easily

NEW YORK—The United States open champion team at indoor polo, the Brooklyn Riding & Driving Club trio, Carl Pflug, Gerard Smith, and Warren A. Sackman made their final appearance as a unit for this season, Tuesday, when they defeated the trio of the Pennsylvania Military College, former intercollegiate champions, in a first round match in the Class A handicap championship at Squadron A Armory, The score was 16½ to 10, and all except two of the the other games of the series. The final event of the program, the newly instituted interscholastic championship, was started and a team calling itself Berkshire-New England, and including representatives of several New England schools, overwhelmed a trio of Wenonah Military Academy with ease by a score of 12½ to minus ½. The losers did not get a goal, while George C. Sherman Jr., son of the former president of the Indoor Polo Association, and a pair of younger brothers of the Yale team, each scored Conly two southern teams lost and they were drawn against other southerners, Purdue University basketball coach, believes that rules of the court sport should be amended so that if will be impossible for a team to make five joints on one drive under the basket. Lambert will propose amendments at the meeting of the National Association of Basketball Coaches, which is the held of Chiefers When the state of the court of the National Association of Basketball Coaches, which is the held of Chiefer When the state of the state of the court of the state points on one drive under the basket. Lambert will propose amendments at the meeting of the National Associ-ation of Basketball Coaches, which is to be held at Chicago, Thursday and

Lambert, who is chairman of the rulees committee, does not favor any radical changes in the rules such as those proposed regarding the dribble and the elimination of the tip-off.
"Under the existing rules," Lambert said in discussing the change which he will propose, "it is possible for a team to score five points on one drive team to score five points on one drive under the basket, which I feel is more than deserved. A man can dribble under the basket and score two points on a field goal as he is fouled. He then can step to the free throw-line and add another point on the first of the free throws he is awarded on the foul. On his next free throw, provided he misses, it is possible for a teammate to secure the ball off the backboard and add a field goal, which gives that team five points on a single play."

In order to eliminate the "five point" possibility, Lambert proposes that the ball be taken back to center after the possibility, Lambert proposes that the

STAR PLAYERS IN SEMIFINALS

CHESTNUT HILL, Mass.—It was a good day for the seeded players in the girls' indoor lawn tennis singles championship tournament of the United States on the covered courts of the Longwood Cricket Club today as they all came through to the semifinal round.

miss Sarah H. Palfrey, Brookline Miss Sarah H. Palfrey, Brookline, the present champion and seeded No. 1 in the draw, easily defeated her sister Miss Joanna O. Palfrey, in straight sets, 6—0, 6—1. In the first set Joanna O. secured only 7 points in the six games played and 4 of them were in the fifth game which she forced to deuce twice. The only game she won in the match was the fourth in the second set in which she forced the champion to run all over the court with the result that the latter drove three returns out of the court and one into the net. The loser did not make a double-fault during the match. The match by points: match by points:

pions, defeating the Misses Elizabeth Reece and Barbara Eaton, 6—0, 6—1
Three singles and four doubles matches took place Tuesday afternoon and early evening, advancing Miss Catherine Boyden and Miss Virginia Merrill, both of Winchester, in the singles and Miss Katherine Winthrop, a Boston junior, who has shown great improvement over the game she displayed in last year's tournament.

In Tuesday's singles, Miss Winthrop started off at a rapid pace, winning the first set at 6—0, but Miss Mary Cutter, another Winchester girl, forced her to play a deuce set to win at 9—7, Miss Merrill won from Miss Elizabeth Pope of Brookline, 6—2, 6—3, while Miss Boyden had more or less of a battle to keep up with Miss Elizabeth Marston of Chestnut Hill. The score of this match was 6—3, 8—6.

Miss Garrison and Miss Winthrop, seeded No. 4 in the doubles, won a three-set battle from two sisters, Misses Barbara and Elizabeth Marston, 6—1, 4—6, 9—7. The summary:

Mr. Wells in the Movies

We hope producers will take the hint. His film will not be preceded by long intellectuals who accept our "scientific" civilization whole-heartedly, indeed as one of its most hopeful prophets and idealists, it is only natural that Mr. H. G. Wells should try his hand at a film scenario. And as one who has planned flights to the moon, invented wars in the air, and patented a time machine, it is natural also that he should attempt the spectacular while he is of a spectacle-music-drama, greater, more beautiful and intellectualing deeper and richer than any artistic form hamaity has hitherto

But his present expectation is slight; the masterpieces of the new form are not likely to appear in our Iffetime; and he does not regard his contains, as anything but an inter-esting failure.

A failure it undoubtedly is, a depressing failure, but with its own instruction and significance. Here we have a man whose imagination is capable of seeing Hardy's "Dynasts" as one of the most wonderful scenarios that was ever written, disap-pointing us with a tiresome piece of propagandist sentimentality. His basic idea is grandiose and Wellsian. In ore sense it contains the stock Wellsian story of the obscure young man who by chance rises to wealth and authority. (While recommending us all to abandon our privileges and work up from the bottom, Mr. Wells rarely fails to provide his own heroes with a stroke of fortune.) But this is merely a side issue, though worth keeping in sight. His main desire here is to bring story, form and music together to "present the conditions and issues of the abolition of war"; his theme, the conflict between Man the Maker and Man the Destroyer.

The King of Clavery, an anachronistic monarchy in southern Europe is assassinated, and the criminals are alleged to be the political tools of Agravia, a neighboring state. The Agravians are an agricultural people whose country has the only supplies of calcomite—a chemical now essential to modern industry—outside the British Empire. The United States has none of this material, and these Balkan-like countries are pawns in the Anglo-American diplomatic game. There is every likelihood that this assassination will be worked up into a pretext for another World War, which nobody particularly wants.

But the heir to the Claverian throne was born in the United States less, ranges himself against the patriots who are trying to force a war. He paves the way to peace, foils a coup d'état, shoots the real insti-

Still again, after Miss Nightingale's return from those two years in the Crimea, when she stole almost in disguise into an England on fire to do her homage, Mrs. Andrews describes a scene at home. What enabled Jesus to do this? Several instances are recorded of his drawing apart from the multitudes for prayer and quiet communby this that he could go forth reinspired and confident, seeing more clearly the unreality of sin, disease, and death. As a result, many healings of sickness and sin were accomplished; and he gave to the world that great gift—the Lord's Prayer. As a panacea for restlessness and haste, Christian Science presents to the world an inspiring message, for it teaches the true meaning of quietness, the quietness which enables us to go about our Father's business unhurried and in an orderly manner. It teaches also that quietness in words and deeds is always the result of quiet thinking. Quiet thinking means that we feel God's presence, and can say in gentle rebuke to all hurried, impatient thoughts, "Be still, and know that I am God." Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer

Toscanini

Toscanini's genius lies in his ability to give the just, the precise, stress to every phrase; to read the melodic line eloquently and correctly; to set in relief the idea that was meant by the composer to occupy the foreground-the idea upon which the accent of the whole com position was intended to fall. And not all the adroitness-drawn-fromexperience in the world could be substituted for these. He is proved by the rightness of his phrasing, just as a singer or an actor is proved by the particular colouring he gives his reading. Thus the orchestra-leader does not have to be a composer so long as he understands the art of composition. Nor is it necessary that he be a virtuoso in the narrow sense of the word. Berlioz and Wagner, among the greatest conductors of their times, were something less than second-rate pianists. For the leader the first and last essential is that he be a musician, After all, the orchestra is his instrument, and if he is to play it well, he must know all the keys. From such a point of view Arturo Toscanini is the ideal conductor. Not only is he a musician to the marrow, but he knows individually every instrument in his orchestra and can play each. Nothing escapes his eye. On the rostrum the simplicity and commanding clarity of his gestures are immensely impressive. He dictates the rhythm with a special play of combined power and delicacy. The influence he exerts on his musicians is so much ers by the presence of a score; Tos-canini has all his notes by memory, lirects with glance and gesture. . . .

eye is never diverted from his play As conductor he has no masteror, rather, his masters are the composers in whose service all his inelligence and ability are at work. He performs constant miracles of intelligence... He listens and com-prehends; and each successive hearing is a new revelation for him. He is hardly conscious of what he so selves would have approved. We shall then be able to perform in an orderly and harmonious manner that which hitherto seemed impossible; and our quietness and confidence will "bless the sower and the seed "

The prophet Isaiah said. "In returning and rest shall ye be saved; ion with God. So refreshed was he in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength." Mrs. Eddy points to the need for quietness when she says on page 15 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." the Christian Science textbook, "In the quiet sanctuary of earnest longings, we must deny sin and plead God's allness." "The quiet sanctuary,"-stillness in thinking,-is not this available wherever we are, even though surrounding circumstances may suggest otherwise? This realization will bring the calm assurance that we can do harmoniously what it is right for us to do. Then no doubt will be entertained as to the satisfactory results of such work.

Many a weary, discouraged one has found that a quiet hour with the Bible, the Christian Science textbook, or the Christian Science periodicals has met a great need, and has empowered him to go on hopefully and courageously, with impatience sienced and unrest stilled. Many times a quiet voice uttering calm words of love and cheer has by its quietness poured oil on troubled waters, soothing the anxious thought in need of compassion and healing.

Let us seek quiet communion with God. Let us remember Paul's words. "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me:" and as we go about our daily work we shall find that calm, trustful thinking unfolds to us newer and greater opportunities for doing good, and for receiving greater blessings. Those with whom we come in contact will feel the quiet assurance and confidence, and may themselves manifest less haste, rush, and impatience. Truly as we replace hurried thinking and acting with quietness in thought and deed, we shall see better and finer results in our daily work.

coat and skirt. The same considerations should apply to the blouse; that is, no visible difficult craftsmanship should be called for in its construction, a fact recognized by those experienced in the selecting of patterns that avoid the pitfalls of seemingly simple details. Jabots, scarfs, ties, frilled fronts and the ever-popular bow are contributing elements to the success of these softly expressive blouses, which are designed for figures large and small, thin, medium and heavy, tall and short. The sleeveless blouse is indeed smart, but for the figure of youthful proportions only, and this she wants for each occasion. Between women of taste and dis-

A useful hint is found in the combination of two shades, or two tones of the chosen shade, for a scarf cut in two sections, with a rointed overlapping at the center back.

A commonsense ruling is to avoid designs calling for points or scallops, or similar details. In themselves these may contribute value to a design, but this year the type of model approved by authoritative style critics is primarily a matter of color, line and fabric, which is a happy combination for the worker at home who possesses a greater degree of taste than of dressmaking tech-

Even Mile. Chanel, one of the most modern and original of the great designers, is using tiny little sleeves which just cover the shoulder, and capes which hang halfway to the waist at the back and are brought around to the front of the sleeve. Louise-boulanger comes boldly out in several of her new models both for day and evening wear, with a real polonaise just a wee bit modified, in that it is not so tightly fitted as those which our grandmethers wore, but with the rounded overskirt at the front and back arranged in folds which are brought up nearly to the hips at the sides. One of these is shown on an evening frock of taffeta in two tones of yellow with a tight underskirt which dips at the back; and there is another in an afternoon gown of printed crêpe-de-chine in a steel blue with a design of tiny rose-buds, on which the selvaged edges of the material are pleated in the form of a rosette at one side.

Modified Victorian Lines

All these departures from the straight, slightly draped frock to which one has become accustomed, will seem a bit strange at first, and women, especially older and plumper women, may be a bit wary about accepting them, but once they realize that they may wear these picturesque garments and still retain the short skirt and that they need have no skirt, and that they need have no fear of the return of the boned corset, they will probably accept them, for they are infinitely more becoming than the plainer frocks. The soft white lace or embroidered muslin which is used as a collar or frill or in the shape of an abbreviated fichu at the neck and in little turnover cuffs at the wrists, gives a dainty touch to the afternoon frock of printed georgette or crêpe-de-chine, and they are used almost univer-sally on the new models.

Frocks of printed materials retain their popularity for the summer ensemble, and added to these are lovely new designs in crepe satin, crepe marocain, taffets and marquisette, which are also used for the same purpose. Paul Caret is showing an ensemble for the older woman which is particularly attractive. It which is particularly attractive, it consists of a long coat of a new heavy silk crèpe, which is called "bouclette," and has narrow inserted strips of blue-and-white printed crèpe-de-chine extending from the crèpe-de-chine extending from the crèpe-de-chine extending from the creation of the front long the creation of the front long that the front long that the constant of the creation of the cre crêpe-de-chine extending from the shoulders on either side of the front, shoulders on either side of the front, with a lining and narrow scarf at the neck of the same figured material, and which is worn with a frock of materials, even including tweed. in the dark blue at the edge.

Old and New in Company

The new long coats of the summer ensemble may be lined or not as one prefers, many of the new models in wool georgette (a material which is very extensively used this season), or in one of the silk crêpes or fine woolen reps being made without a lining. Often a narrow facing of the material of the frock is used on the

Topcoats for Men

Men who dress with distinction will welcome their old friend, the Chesterfield, in lighter weight than in previous seasons, and with some new features and colorings. Such a coat has a definite place in the wardrobe of the well-dressed man, as a standard outergarment, suitable for either day or informal evening wear, provided it is chosen in dark gray, blue or black. This spring, popular opinion in respect to this coat seems to have swerved away from other models to with button-through front is also Green seen, as well as the double-breasted three-button coat of that design. All of these are of the semi-shapely type with the general tendency to fit at with the general tendency to fit at the waist. Coverts, cheviots, worther waist. Coverts, cheviots, workeds, cashmeres and the like are all start materials for garments of this smart materials for mal daytime wear.

For Formal Wear The strictly formal day or evening coat, made of practically the same materials as the Chesterfield, has several distinctive features which add to its dignity and formality. The fronts, silk faced to edge, give elegance, as do the pockets built without flaps. These coats call for either a silk or opera hat, according to the occasion. The Chesterfield calls for a black derby.

Especially popular this spring are amel's-hair topcoats which are brought in natural tone, navy blue and Oxford-gray, suited for either town or country wear. This is an ideal garment for early spring or late fall, as it is both light and warm, is made in a wide range of models suited to every type of figure, and carries with it a certain degree of sportiness that is said to account largely for its popularity. A favorite model is double-breasted with either three or four sets of button, and with a collar sufficiently high to afford protection when turned up. There is also an all-around belted model and one with a belt only across the back; fashion advisers favor, however, the double-breasted beltless coat.

For Uncertain Weather

Another conveniently adaptable topcoat is the English raglan, with characteristic shoulder lines. ample pockets and easy comfort of fit. This is a coat that adapts itself to aveling, motoring and general wear. Made of waterproof gabardine it is a copular combination raincoat and lightweight topcoat and is favored well-dressed men on days when the weather is uncertain. This has quite superseded the once popular worn by the fastidious business man.

Considering that a topcoat is one of the most serviceable items in a a matter of good judgment to be as that respect as possible.

District Manager Wanted

An exceptional opportunity has developed for a District Manager in this territory and in several other territories. An associate concern of one of the largest brass and copper goods manufacturing concerns has developed a new all-copper system for lawn and garden watering,—a product of interest to more than 90% of homes. This franchise will pay a District Manager upwards of $25,000 annually, and will grow from year to year. Complete sales plan backed by national advertising, makes this an opportunity that presents itself only once in the history of a manufacturer. The man we want must know how to organize high-grade salesmen (salesmen earn $6000 to $10,000 a year), maintain an engineering department which we will organize, and conduct a business which will give adequate sales representation. The man we want must have some capital or backing, ability and record for doing things. We will open territory with liberal local advertising, in addition to our National advertising. We have never known a better opportunity for a District Manager. Give complete information with first letter. THE NATIONAL MULLERMIST COMPANY, $735 E. Jefferson Avenue, Detroit, Michigan.

Who: MADAME DE SÉVIGNÉ. (Say-veen-yay'.)

Where: France.

When: Seventeenth century.

Why famous: One of the most brilliant letter-writers of any age. Marie de Rabutin-Chantal was born in Paris, her family one of the great families of Burgundy. During childhood she was in the care of her uncle, the abbé de Livry, to whom in later life she was wont to refer af-fectionately as "Le Bien Bon." When still very young, she was married to the Marquis de Sévigné, a nobleman of whom not much good was said by his contemporaries. There were two children, a soldier son and the daughter, Madame de Grignan, to whom most of the celebrated letters were written. Madame de Sévigné lived either at her husband's Breton chateau, Les Rochers, or in Paris in the Hotel Carnavalet, lately become a most fascinating museum. Occasionally she stayed with her daughter in Provence. Her devotion to this daughter was slightly fanatical. Though the son Charles seems to have been far more worthy, it was to the somewhat cold and impassive daughter that her mother's love went out in unbounded measure. Nearly 1500 letters survive, including those written by and those addressed to Madame de Sévigné. Hers are eloquent, full of fire and witty are eloquent, full of fire and witty comment, intelligent and accurate observation, with vivid descriptions of persons and events during the gilded reign of Louis XIV. They form an important source of knowledge of affairs political and social during the period. It is an idea of the palate; it denotes a state of being parched, and comes to us through the Latin austerus, "harsh, sour to the taste," rom the Greek αὐστηράς (austeros) "making the tongue dry," from avog (auos), "parched, dry." Those modes of life which are distastefully lacking in amenity are called austere. To shun luxury, to incur mortification, to avoid cheerful enjoyments, are exhibitions of austerity, as well as is rigid execution of the laws.

Britain's Industrial Revolution

REAT BRITAIN was late in discovering the Textent to which the movement for the rationalization of industry was extending in the United States and Germany, and the growing interest with which the movement was being followed in France, Belgium, Italy and other European industrial countries. The first tendency, about 1926, was to substitute skepticism for indifference. Rationalization was regarded by most industrialists and economists as merely a new-fangled word for mergers and trusts. Such a mood still prevails to some extent, but with fuller knowledge it is passing.

Last year was a period of real awakening to the significance of the new industrial method which involves in its complete expression the planned and conscious organization of a whole industry to concentrate production in the most suitable works, to eliminate every avoidable form of waste, to obtain the utmost attainable efficiency from both labor and mechanism, and to replace harmful effects of excessive competition and ill-regulated output by co-operation for the benefit of producers and consumers alike. This year will see a great advance toward the fruition of rationalization measures which are still in the preparatory stage.

The contest between new conceptions, based on a recognition of changed world economic and industrial conditions, and the traditional thought and outlook which carried Great Britain to supremacy in the entirely different conditions of the nineteenth century, is still proceeding vigorously. The advance already achieved, however, can only be fully appreciated when the tenacity of the deep-rooted traditions is kept in view. The recent merger of the Vickers-Armstrong and the Cammell Laird steel and engineering concerns; the fusion of important Durham iron companies; the projected fusion of the Dorman, Long and Bolckow-Vaughan concerns; the formation of the Lancashire cotton spinning corporation; the merging of ten Lancashire coal companies, and the drastic processes of writing down capital to insure financial stability in several of these undertakings are avowedly only the preliminary steps to make possible definite measures of rationalization in the technical and organization sense.

Even more important, as an indication of future possibilities, is the general and widespread awakening of interest expressed in conof employers, technical experts and workers. The Workers' Educational Association and the Welfare Workers' Institute have chosen rationalization as their principal subject of study this year. The final report of the Balfour Committee on Industry and Trade, in declaring that rationalization is the essential first step to the restoration of British industrial policy, will further stimulate all these discussions, and it may be safely forecast that by the end of this year the change in outlook throughout British industry will be far greater than could have been regarded as possible two years ago.

Philadelphia's Model Street

HETHER the instigators and pioneers had in thought to start a wider municipal movement and remembered the old proverb that a good example is the best sermon, or whether they simply wanted to live on a tidier street, the Philadelphians who have made their own street a model of tidiness will probably influence other neighborhoods in the same direction more than could any expert adviser by a series of lectures. It is reported that such is the

Be that as it may, however, although a street is practically the common property of those who live on it, the idea of taking common pride in it is of such recent origin, and so little considered by most, that the "model street" in Philadelphia attracts newspaper attention. Such a street is, in fact, "news." Municipal tidiness, in customary practice, is largely a contest between street departments whose function is to pick up litter, and citizens whose delight (in extreme cases) seems to be to provide it. Nor is this so very surprising. The time is not long past when street conditions that would now be considered intolerable were generally accepted as a matter of course.

Philadelphia's "model street" sets an example that might well be widely followed. It applies an ideal which, if widely enough recognized and practiced, would solve a serious problem of the ighways and parks. One is reminded that before long "sumer is y-cumen in," and that there will no doubt be the customary petty industries littering the highways and a host of eat-andride-away picnickers littering the parks and roadsides. One may at least hope that these inconsiderate merrymakers will be fewer than before in proportion to the total number of picnickers. So much has now been printed on this topic that carelessness becomes less and less an excuse; and, as choice becomes conscious between littering and not littering, less litter may reasonably be expected. Signs are visible of a growing public appreciation of the highways and arks as being community possessions that hould be protected against deterioration by private business, big or little, and against the disrespectful treatment of the eat-and-ride-away picnickers. Such opinion grows slowly by the conversion of indifference into active interest and concern; and whatever-like the "model street"-suggests that tidiness is worth the co-operative effort to obtain and maintain it is a helpful influence.

A Senator From the Sanctum

TTENRY J. ALLEN, the new United States Senator from Kansas, is a newspaper man. He is, or has been, many other things, among them Governor of Kansas, special commissioner for Near East Relief in southern Russia, and president of the Kansas State Board of Charities. More than any of these, he has been the intimate personal friend of that playboy of Kansas journalism, William Allen White, and with him visited Europe during war times, giving suggestion to an amusing book, "The Martial Adventures of Henry and Me." As a politician, Senator Allen, while eminently Republican and regular, even in the days of Kansas Populism, did break away from the state organization a year ago, and support the presidential ambitions of Mr. Hoover rather than those of his fellow statesman, Senator Curtis. It is an illustration of the vagaries of politics that the election of Curtis as Vice-President opened the way for Allen to be Senator, while a further picturesque touch is added by the fact that the Governor who appointed him was in past years his executive secretary.

In the main, Mr. Allen's achievements in statecraft are before him. While he was an efficient Governor, the act which attracted most attention to himself and to his Administration was his not very determined threat to put William Allen White, his most intimate friend, in fail for alleged unlawful editorial utterances. The immediate effect of this assault upon a crony was to stir the victim to writing an editorial on freedom of speech which won the Pulitzer prize of that year. Addressing himself "To an Anxious Friend," Mr. White said some words as to the worth of reason as opposed to force and suppression that may well be quoted here:

You tell me that law is above freedom of utterance. And I reply that you can have no wise laws nor free enforcement of wise laws unless there is free expression of the wisdom of the people—and, alas, their folly with it. But if there is freedom, folly will die of its own poison, and the wisdom will survive. That is the history of the race. It is the proof of man's kinship with God. You say that freedom of utterance is not for time of stress, and I reply with the sad truth that only in time of stress is freedom of utterance in danger. No one ques tions it in calm days, because it is not needed. And the reverse is true also; only when free utterance is sup-pressed is it needed, and when it is needed, it is most vital to justice. Peace is good. But if you are interested in peace through force and without free discussion—that is to say, free utterance decently and in order-your interest in justice is slight. And peace without justice is tyranny, no matter how you may sugar-coat it with expediency. This State today is in more danger from suppression than from violence, because, in the end, sup pression leads to violence. Violence, indeed, is the child of suppression. Whoever pleads for justice helps to keep peace; and whoever tramples upon the plea for justice temperately made in the name of peace only outrages peace and kills something fine in the heart of man which God put there when we got our manhood. When that is killed, brute meets brute on each side of

We think that in the end the present Senator came to agree with his editorial intimate. Indeed, it is to be hoped that he did, for a better and clearer statement of the right of free speech has seldom been formulated. As an editor, Senator Allen is somewhat at odds with certain present-day tendencies in journalism. He still clings to the old-fashioned, if not indeed obsolete, ideas of the dignity of his profession, and condemns the tendency to appeal to the uneducated tastes of the multitudes. His address on this subject before the last annual meeting of the American Society of Newspaper Editors was pithy with wit and biting sarcasms directed against the newspaper of the masses. He complained of the sacrifice of the purely educational and informative features of a newspaper to the so-called "human interest" and "reader interest" material furnished by syndicates. But he confessed ruefully that he had to follow the lead of the crowd in order to maintain the material prosperity of his paper, the Wichita Beacon. As he put it:

We certainly whoop it up on reader interest, hoping we certainly whoop it up on reader interest, hoping that in the paper we get out, there being no other paper worse in the town, we will hold the intelligentsia since they can't go anywhere else and we will also get the morons for whose presence on the circulation list ten years ago I didn't give a tinker's dam. But now they are there, believe me, I defy any publisher in a city of 110,000 people to show more of them than I can or more reason why they should be there.

As a newspaper publisher, Senator Allen thus found it necessary to adjust his journalistic pabulum to the comprehension of morons; one wonders just how he is going to adjust himself to the needs of senatorial oratory.

Earning More and Making Less

TET earnings of the railroads of the United States have been improving, in a general way, for five years; in each year that an improvement is shown, however, the situation becomes less favorable. Such a paradoxical statement is best explained by Edward G. Buckland, chairman of the board of directors of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company, who pointed out in that road's annual report that the limit to which economies could be carried was approaching.

Such a situation has been apparent to observers, and more particularly to railroad men, for some time. To reduce costs steadily is a highly creditable performance, when an efficient public service is being maintained at the same time, but to look to economies in operation for a greater net return on the constantly increasing value of a property, rather than to a proportionate increase in gross earnings annually, is a condition probably without parallel in the operation of any public utility, other than street car lines which may be considered as similar to the steam railway in this instance. The entire trend of the public utility industry is toward higher gross earnings, obtained either through an increasing volume of business or through higher charges for service rendered. Where lower rates have been made it has been for the purpose of stimulating business, and this result, at least in the long-distance telephone, has been achieved. The railroads, however, cannot further reduce their charges, nor would a general reduction increase their volume of business noticeably. If they are to show higher net earnings, with freight business growing in very slight volume and with passenger business decreasing, it must be as a direct consequence of economies.

This is not in itself an argument for higher charges. Rather, it is one for protecting present rates. The constant whittling away of ratesconcessions given to one town or another, to this industry or that, to one shipper or the other in the way of "commodity rates" lower than the regular charges in order that they may meet alleged trade conditions or competition elsewhere—must be stopped, for it represents a loss largely in net earnings. It is an economic condition challenging the railroad industry, as well as investors, for, as Mr. Buckland observes, economies in operation cannot forever offset reduced gross earnings.

World-Wide Oil Conservation

OME significance attaches to the fact that Sir Henry Deterding, managing director of the Royal Dutch Company, should come to attend the conference of the members of the American Petroleum Institute called to discuss the problems of curtailment.

Last fall Walter C. Teagle of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, Sir John Cadman of the Anglo-Persian Oil Company and Sir Henry Deterding conferred in Scotland at Achnacarry Castle. That conference indicated that it was agreeable to the powerful units in the industry to hold production within some bounds of reasonableness.

The American Petroleum Institute is prepared to show how excess production can at least be checked, if not actually curtailed. Oklahoma has effectually prohibited the sinking of new wells or the opening up of new districts. California operators have agreed upon a comprehensive plan for checking production, and Texas operators are prepared to do likewise. By appointing new committees to carry forward this work it is expected to make the conservation movement in the Western Hemisphere even more effective. Plans have been drawn to hold production down to the 1928 figure, not alone in the United States, but also by the companies operating in Mexico and in the northern part of South America.

These plans are in harmony with the recently announced policy of the United States Government. Soon after President Hoover moved into the White House he stated that reserve oil fields would be closed and no more leases would be made. A movement calculated to conserve the natural resources of the country is not incompatible with public good, nor should such a movement be held prejudicial under the antitrust law.

The Portland Vase Goes on Sale

THE sale of the world-famous Portland vase, which has been advertised to take place in London on the second of May, is more than a mere auction-room sensation. The motives of private collectors may be those of personal glory or gain, or a mixture of both. But, whatever their motives, they are ready, as recent sales in Europe and America have shown, to spend vast sums of money on manuscripts or art treasures

Measured in terms of money, there is little difference between the manuscript of Alice in Wonderland and a painting by Rembrandt. There is, however, a great intrinsic difference between the two, for while the painting or sculpture or any other work of art wrought by the hand of the artist can be fully enjoyed only at first hand, a manuscript contains little of the author's genius that cannot be obtained in a printed copy of his work. Whatever the sentimental or emotional value of the thrill to be obtained from gazing at Shakespeare's signature, or even, as the manuscript of the Elizabethan play of Sir Thomas Moore is claimed by certain scholars to have disclosed, at the pages of his handwriting, it is not the same effect as the imaginative impression which any of his plays conveys to those whose minds are open to receive it. Yet Shakespeare's plays can be obtained for a few dollars, whereas his signature would easily fetch several hundred thousands. This strange disparity in value between the obviously valueless and the incontestably valuable may seem queer, but it is, on the whole, a harmless way of indulging the expensive ambition to be different from anybody else by possessing not only what no one else does, but what no one else, or but very few, can possess.

It is not so, however, in the case of an object of graphic or plastic art. Though the money paid for a picture or a piece of sculpture or a finely wrought vase may not exceed that paid for a manuscript or a first edition, the art collector without doubt keeps back from mankind the inheritance which is bequeathed to it by its greatest artists, and the more so because there always exists a handful of men, not generally to be found among the friends of owners of private galleries, who are capable of molding this experience into new forms of beauty.

Keats and Heine both gave to the world exquisite lyrics which would have remained unwritten had their imagination been untouched. in the one instance, by the constant contemplation of the Venus of Milo in the Louvre, and, in the other, of the rare Greek vases in the British Museum. Beauty begets beauty, and it is for this reason that the sale of the Portland vase, which has been on show in the gem room of the British Museum for more than a hundred years, cannot but be deplored. It is unique not only as a work of art, but as a work of historical and cultural value. Its purchaser, whoever he shall be, would deserve well of mankind if he made it again accessible to the public.

Roofscapes

By SISLEY HUDDLESTON

HERE is surely nothing which gladdens the eye and | warms the heart more than a roofscape. In my dictionary, doubtless out of date, the word does not figure; but the reality is perpetually before me. From my great town windows I look out over an immense prospect of low and high roofs, sloped at different angles, cutting the sky line in a marvelous variety of shapes. When I take the train out of town, I gaze from the carriage windows on the most delicious succession of roofs. They are of all ages and all colors. There is one village which I pass on my way to my own cottage that presents the most beautiful cluster of roofs-or so I suppose—in the whole world. Its appeal is unfailing, and ten minutes before we arrive at this exquisite spectacle my nose is already flattened against the pane of the com-

The name of the place is, I believe, Triel, though it has never been my lot to stay there, and the letters are blurred on the signboard of the tiny station as we shoot through. It lies in a hollow below the iron road, so that, from my point of vision, I see only the roofs and the walls foreshortened. But what a sight! The roofs, one would imagine, were tiled many generations ago. They are gray and green and pink. They have taken their hues from the weather, and the patina could never be imitated. It is like the rust with which ancient bronze medals and copper coins, which have lain for hundreds of years in certain soils, are covered. Such richness of roofs is almost incredible: it is as though time had stood still for the inhabitants of Triel, and they have lived in this haunt of antique peace, unruffled by events, since they first put upon their houses these protecting roofs.

They did not work with rule and trigonometry. The walls were simply built by the process of laying stone on stone. When they judged that the house was high enough, they laid the laths at any angle they pleased, and upon the laths fixed their tiles. The result is that the roofs are at every degree between flatness and steepness. There is a peculiar harmony in these intersecting lines. Gustave Doré would have delighted in them. They have a medieval air. It may be that they are architecturally crazy, but they are pictorially perfect.

Moreover, they are not rigidly straight. Many rains and suns have drenched and dried them, so that they have swelled and warped, and now run in ripples. A modern painter, Raoul Dufy, makes his decorative seas of little curves. These roofs undulate like the seas of Raoul Dufy. They are moss-grown in patches, and here and there wild flowers, the seeds of which have been dropped by the birds, stand up in tufts. There is a crumbling church, too, with picturesque roof and gray tower. The whole village is like a dreamthorp.

For some time after this roofscape has vanished, I cannot regard the flat fields and low hills and sparkling river. They are doubtless beautiful, but the beauty of the landscape has not the quality of the beauty of the roofscape. There is something in the deep humanity of the dreamthorp that quietly permeates the imagination and that over these habitations. shuts out all else. The brooding calm of generations hovers

I have not seen a cart in the narrow streets or any sign of activity, and yet, unreal as Triel appears to be, down below the unbroken running telegraph lines, in its very absence of movement lies something deep-rooted. Presently we swing into sight of a gay and busy town, but its brisk comings and goings do not produce an impression of unconquerable vitality comparable to that which lurks beneath the sleepy roofscape of Triel.

Everything, however, has its charm; and it is good, in cheerful neighborliness by the side of the singing rail- its roofscape.

road. They are bright enough, these roofs, and if they do not win the heart as do the roofs of Triel, they amuse by their newness and a certain toylike trimness. You will find precisely such red and white houses in the shopwindows of the estate agents and builders. A tiny model presents itself, spick and span, to the passer-by. Smartly painted, it invites his admiration. And now from the train, eaves and gables and a gilt weathercock direct attention to the latest toy town, to which week-enders come in holiday attire.

There is a large hive of industry at which the train stops—a drab slate-roofed city of no particular charm. slated roofs are too much on the same pattern. They are like lids which are most interesting when they are lifted. They are not daintily fashioned or prettily enameled, as are the lids of old trinket boxes; but they are purely utilitarian, as are the lids of pans. Perhaps they, too, cover a bubbling life within; but we are not Asmodeus who, in Le Sage's story, could lift the lid of habitations, and peep in upon the habitants. Yet even these nondescript slate roofs whet human curiosity: under them men and women are toiling and playing, hoping, planning, meditating, and occupying themselves in a thousand and

The roofs become more scattered, and sometimes they afford strange contrasts. There, for example, beyond the meadow in which cattle are grazing, is a thatched cottage. The thick straw cozily keeps out the inclemencies of the seasons; it has turned from gold to black; a climbing plant has thrown its arms over one corner of the roof. In the distance, halfway up the hillside, is a château reflected in a piece of water; its roofs are regularly disposed, with pointed turrets and tall chimneys; the wings are at right angles with the central pile.

I like to think that something good has remained of the relations of lord and tenant from olden days; and that the peasant from the thatched-roofed cottage is heartily received under the roof of the château, while the chatelain does not disdain, in his rounds to visit the peasant under his thatch. It may be that all this is gone -the train dashes by-but at least the picture of the roofs of cottage and château, standing in companionship in the countryside, conjures up memories of a simpler

My own village I know best by its roofs. They are of all shapes and kinds. One looks down a winding lane, and sees a vista of higher and lower roofs, of roofs that recede and of roofs that protrude, of dilapidated roofs and of newly mended roofs, of roofs of many materials, of roofs blue and brown, dark green and burnished orange; and behind, as the land lifts, other roofs between the trees, one above the other, to the very summit of the slopes. Those roofs are familiar friends. They are as individual as their owners. In some sense they are better known to me than their owners, and have a richer personality. They have plucked wisdom from time, and from experience have learned patience and placidity.

So it is that in a landscape it is the roofscape which most appeals to me, for it conveys a quintessential humanity. And even in a seascape I am tempted to look for the roofscape—the roofscape of such a sunken city as is said to exist off the coast of Brittany. Legend has it that somewhere beneath the waves is the wonderful city of Ys, complete with its roofed market place, its roofed palace, and mansions, and humble dwellings, its galleries of art, and its halls of music, its schools and communal monuments, more perfect than any that we know; that if one listens on a clear day one will hear the sound of bells and of laughter; and that if one looks into the calm emerging from this wondering mood, to be awakened to modernity by the red roofs of new villas huddled together of our dreams with it spires and turrets and towers—and

LONDON HILDREN of several of Britain's outstanding public | the air for long-distance transmission. Occasionally the men are beginning to follow in the footsteps of their parents. Miss Ishbel MacDonald and Miss Megan covered that this is due to the curiosity of the pigeons Lloyd George, daughters of two former Prime Ministers, Ramsay MacDonald and David Lloyd George, have long taken part in public affairs. Oliver Baldwin, son of the present Prime Minister, has also stood for Parliament, though being a Socialist, his politics are in opposition to those of other members of the family to which he belongs. Diana Churchill, daughter of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, has just made a speech in public, in presenting awards at a musical competition among choirs. Another rising young politician is Quintin Hogg, son of Lord Hailsham, the Lord Chancellor, who been elected president of the Union Debating Society at Oxford, a position held at different times during their student careers by William Ewart Gladstone, Lord Salisbury, Lord Curzon, and other famous statesmen.

A pleasant story of President Hoover is told by Capt. R. P. Hornby, M. C., in the columns of the Sunday Express. Captain Hornby, it appears, had been associated with Mr. Hoover in some business transactions in London. Captain Hornby, as an Englishman, went to the war. While I was in Gallipoli," he says, "Mr. Hoover who, of course, as a neutral, had remained in England, carried on his business. One day in the trenches I received a letter from him. In it he stated that he had completed a certain deal which I would have been in had I been in England. Mr. Hoover added, 'I have today forwarded to your bank a draft to cover the profit that would have been yours had you been over here." Captain Hornby also says:

No one but himself knew just what a sacrifice Mr. Hoover made when he accepted the chairmanship of the neutral commission that was supplying food to the starving civilians of Belgium and France in the occupied areas. At a time when his probably unequaled knowledge of inance could have been turned to enormous profit he chose to put self

"Talking Post Cards" will, in future, make it possible to dispense with ordinary printed greeting cards at Christmas and on birthdays. The latest novelty is a very small gramophone record imprinted on a picture post card. It is about three inches in diameter and looks like a thin brown filament, but is shaped and marked like an ordinary record. It can be sent by post for a penny and on arrival at its destination it will deliver its message of greeting by being played on an ordinary gramophone. Messrs. Raphael Tuck, the post-card publishers, confidently expect their gramophone post cards to be the novelty of the year. They will be put on the market shortly at threepence each and there is to be a great variety of them. At present, there are ordinary songs like "Annie Laurie" and "Auld Lang Syne," special holiday numbers, and a romantic declaration of never-changing love. Large records, also, are stamped on calendars, and there is scope for further development of this invention in many different ways.

Big Ben, the famous clock in the House of Commons which now supplies the time by wireless to thousands of homes throughout the British Isles and is listened to by Englishmen in Australia, India, and other far lands as a link with home, has now rung the hours for seventy years. Bells have a habit of lasting for long periods—Big Tom, the predecessor of Big Ben, rang at Westminster for 400 years—so that Big Ben will probably be ringing centuries hence despite the fact that it was cracked a few months after it was first hung and has remained so to this day. The bell is bolted to a beam and in consequence no one now knows the real tone of which it would be capable under different circumstances. Despite this the volume of tone from the bell is enormous and calls for much careful attention from the officials of the British Broadcasting Company. The microphone from which the sound is taken in the tower of the House of Commons is wrapped with cloth to soften the reverberations before they are put on who are Big Ben's neighbors in the tower and who some times disturb the wrapping.

When Maj. L. A. Sherrard of Brighton retired from his thirty-one years with the Royal Engineers in the British Army, he found it hard to occupy all his time. He therefore decided that he would do something for the British and Foreign Bible Society in which he was particularly interested, but he could not decide what. Suddenly he thought of a number of old bottles which were accumulating in his home. With great trepidation he put them in a basket, and going to the chemist's asked him if he would put something into his Bible Society's collection box in exchange for them. The chemist at once did so, and asked for more. Thus encouraged, the army officer, though he found that this was a harder thing to do than to be under fire, went round to his friends and collected bottles from them. His scheme became rapidly known, and he soon found that bottles began to arrive at his house by motor and by carrier. In a few months he collected from their sale £28 10s. 4d., and last year he raised over £50. His "bottles for Bibles" scheme has now aroused so much interest that he anticipates raising £100 in 1929. He is now honorary secretary of the Brighton and Hove auxiliary of the Bible Society.

Undergraduates in England have been returning hospitality extended to them in past years in Austria by entertaining a party of students from that country. The visitors comprise three men and three girls who have all, at different times, conducted parties of English students on walking tours in Austria arranged by the English National Union of Students. The Austrians spent three weeks in England, visiting Cambridge, Exeter, Birmingham, Reading, and Leeds, and finishing up with seven days in London.

The Prince of Wales has always shown a fine disregard for the conventions of dress and has openly declared his dislike for stiff collars and "boiled" shirts. He went a step farther recently when he appeared at a championship contest of the London Federation of Boys Clubs dressed in a dinner jacket, with a soft fronted shirt with soft cuffs and "polo" collar and a gray pullover. This novel evening attire made quite a stir in the audience and it now remains to be seen if this will set a fashion among smart young men for similar entertainments.

Myron T. Herrick

To THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR: For nearly thirty years, I have known and admired Mr. Herrick. In business, politics, and diplomacy he was always the same. His strength and influence came from ability, vision and an extraordinary human understanding.

It was typical of America's good fortune to have such an Ambassador at Paris in the World War and afterward. In every crisis, in every step of reconstruction, his tactful sympathy never falled. It surely can be said that the ful sympathy never failed. It surely can be said that the world is a better place to live in because Myron Herrick served as the American Ambassador to France during the world upheaval which began on Aug. 4, 1914, and is only now subsiding. In the long list of men who served humanity in this time, history will credit few with having rendered a more outstanding or constructive service.
